Nippin is the Founder of Novellus. He is a former master mariner with a master's degree in economics, a PhD in Social Sciences and Anthropology and a desire for life-long learning in the wider disciplines of humanities, social psychology and philosophy.

After a near collision at sea, he took up a passion for investigating accidents and helping leaders humanize risk and safety by listening to the perspectives of those involved in accidents.

As a former subject matter expert at DNV, Nippin also developed an interest in making compliance meaningful for achieving business goals.

He is the host of the podcast Embracing Differences, blogs regularly and is recognised both in the research community and across safety critical industries for his ability to make research accessible to businesses and people at work.

Rob is the founder of The Social Psychology of Risk (SPoR), The Centre for Leadership and Learning in Risk and Human Dimensions.

Rob has authored 12 books in SPoR that have exceeded over 350,000 downloads. He has published more than 1000 blogs and is an International presenter.

Rob has extensive experience in risk having founded institutions for high-needs young people and with careers in Corrections, Government, Not-For-Profit, Education, Teaching, Counselling and Community Services.

Rob's programs, curriculum, tools and services are being implemented globally in organisations using SPoR materials and philosophy.

Rob has numerous awards for his work in critical incident management including, executive work on the ECOG for the Beaconsfield Mine Disaster.
